Family Resiliency Trainer

Camp Pendleton

Families OverComing Under Stress (FOCUS), an evidence-based resiliency building program for military families, based at the UCLA Semel Institute for Neuroscience and Human Behavior, is seeking a full time Resiliency Trainer based at Naval Base San Diego. Working for FOCUS provides candidates the ability to participate in an innovative and effective program that seeks to meet the unique needs of active duty military children and families through a variety of initiatives. Resiliency trainers have the opportunity to deliver cutting edge family-centered services to military families experiencing multiple deployments and combat operational stress. This position requires a Master’s or doctoral degree in a mental health field. Excellent communication skills and comfort speaking in public are required. Experience, high comfort level, and/or knowledge about working with families and military populations preferred.

To apply online and see a complete description go to:
https://jobs2.mednet.ucla.edu/css_external/CSSPage_Welcome.ASP?T=20111122112513&

Enter job # H63557

This is a contract position with UCLA, salary starts at $52,000 or higher depending on experience and education. Full benefits. Contract is for 12 months with potential to renew annually.